The enfranchised soul starts only at the sound Of immortality, scorning the mound Of feeble earth, that hides it from the sight Of endless bliss and freedom s stainless light; It pants to fly, it struggles to advance Its guerdon bliss, life its inheritance. Home of the Spirit. Oh! unfeigned isle Of happy Leuce, what pleasures there beguile The soul s delights, the bliss of being free, The hopes, the joys that mark eternity. The loved and lost are there, and there will come Those we now love on earth; the Spirit s home. There from the world set free, and earth and sin, Where but the pure in heart can enter in, The Spirit rests from toil, no more can tears The soul oppress, vain hopes...
