Morbid Conditions of known or suspected dependence upon alterations in Internal Secre-tions. (i) Thyroid. (ii) Supra-renal Bodies. (iii) Pituitary Body. (iv) Sex-Glands. The mere title that has been given to this chapter is an indication that under it will be considered a great variety of morbid conditions, many of which have no clinical relationship with one another. The only alternative method to the one adopted is to describe each secretion or excretion by itself. This method, though easier, is unsatisfactory, for two important reasons. Firstly, because the interest of a secretion or excretion from the point of view of pathology lies not in the secretion or excretion itself, but in the conditions of the body which cause abnormalities of that secretion or excretion; and secondly, because the inter-dependence of the secretions and excretions is so great that no...
