And if we found, on inquiry, that the Judge had the distinct words of another statute in his favour, while Dr. Pinnock had nothing but a fancied analogy of language, we should side with the Jud, and not with the Doctor. Now, the point is this. The Rubric the authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward the Sixth. The first and most natural question is, What was done by Parliament in that year? We find that the 2 and 3 Edward 6. c. I. is entitled, An Act of Uniformity of Service and Administration of the Sacraments throughout the Realm, and that by it the Book of Common Prayer, commonly called King Edward the Sixth's First Prayer Book, received parliamentary sanction. By this Prayer-Book a certain usage was for the first time established throughout the Church of England. Before that time there had been--we learn from the Prayer-Book itself--various uses, some following Salsbury use, some Herford use, some the use of Bangor, some of Yorke, and some of Lincoln. These were now to be abolished. Down to that year a great many ornaments had been used in churches and by the ministers, according to the provincial constitutions of different dioceses, or the uses of others. These were now to be controlled and made uniform. Before that time the ornaments of the minister had included albe, amice, chasuble, cope, dalmatic, and other garments. By the first Prayer-Book, the minister saying or singing mattens and evensong, baptizing and burying, in parish...
