Excerpt: . . . by the stories of Nisus and Meleager, that the external soul of the one resided in the purple lock of hair which his daughter cut off, and of the other in the firebrand which his mother caused to be burned. The majority of the dead, however, never played the part of ghosts nor wandered into other bodies. What, then, became of them? There was always a vague feeling, the result of a materializing philosophy, that the dead, even if still sustaining a sort of life of their own so as actually to feel the weight of mould upon them, were unconscious and forgetful of earth, 2 Bito66v Tz ml ouav avLxfiehii; and Iwanowitsch3 remarks that they rarely answered prayers addressed to them. But affection and fear, though operating from different causes, both militated strongly against these notions. Homer4 is not clear on this...
